1. Technical consultation

Our technical staff provide free help to architects, other specifiers and self-builders in order to ease the selection and design of all stone features. Involving us at an early stage in a project ensures that all issues can be taken into account such as design, technical performance and budget parameters, as well as scheduling deliveries to suit building programme requirements. Our team has many years experience, and this can be invaluable to our customers. This is helpful because for many of the people we deal with, stone features are a very infrequent purchase – or, for some, may even be a one-off purchase. As a consequence, this relatively specialist building product is not something which everyone knows a great deal about, and therefore having technical experts on hand is obviously very important and useful.

Our technical consultation service provides:

- Initial advice on the suitability of stone for the project
- More detailed input on design for specific features
- Site meetings
- Final specification on all features needed
- Production and delivery scheduling – plus installation option

2. Detailed quotations

For any aspect or element of a new building or renovation, it is clearly vital to know what the cost is going to be. For stone architectural features, we can provide you with an accurate cost at the design stage assuming all details are available, or it may be possible to provide a budget price if they are not. For fully detailed quotations, we can use architects' designs, bills of quantity or, best of all, a stonework schedule. For budget costings we can work from basic information such as number and type of features that are likely to be required, along with length, breadth and height dimensions. A rough sketch always helps too. We cover every aspect of the job, and central to what we do is ensuring that there are no hidden extras for you. Every aspect is fully detailed to ensure you know exactly what the final total will be – assuming the requirements don't change of course. All quotations include dimensions of the products quoted and total weight of the items to be supplied. If material samples are needed, we can also supply these to show the colour and finish of the product quoted.

3. Custom design

We very much specialise in the manufacture of individually designed stone features to meet specific project requirements. The overall design of these units comes either from architects' drawings, or from pictures you might provide. We are often asked to produce a design based on rough visuals, a variation of one of our standard products, or just from a verbal brief, and we always aim to help as much as we can. This approach of carrying out custom design for stone features is typically more cost effective for you, as our in-depth knowledge on a technical level means we are able to take all factors into account – not just aesthetics. These factors include the practicalities and economy of milling manufacture and stonework production, along with how the stonework design may impact on the build.

4. Manufacture

There are four main stages to the manufacturing process:

- Cut Block Stones
- Milling Stones
- Polish Stones
- Final quality checks

5. Delivery

Although some of our customers may find it convenient to collect from our premises (in particular for standard products), generally speaking we deliver to site – and on a specified day to ensure the product is ready as part of your building schedule. We use our own lorries or trusted specialist delivery partners, which means there's a full understanding of how your product needs to be handled to ensure safety and preservation of perfect condition.

6. Installation

For relatively simple stone features, perhaps a cill or head, it's generally the case that a building contractor will have all the necessary skills to install them properly. However, for more complex features – e.g. a portico or balustrading – our customers often prefer to use our own directly employed expert installation team. By retaining us as a specialist installer you can be sure that we will get the job right first time. This can, in the long run, save money and lower the risk of using someone whose experience in handling and installing stone is limited. There's also the advantage that the stone feature or features remain our responsibility right up until the installation is complete and signed off. In this respect, there's the added reassurance of knowing that the investment remains secure throughout the installation.
